A new government has been formed in Luxembourg

Following the 2023 general elections in Luxembourg, a new government has been formed under a two-party center-right coalition. This coalition is led by the Christian Democrats and the free-trade liberals. Luc Frieden, from the Christian Democrat Party (CSV), has been announced as the new Prime Minister. The CSV won 21 seats in the 60-member legislature, indicating a significant presence in the government.

The previous government, led by Luxembourg's liberal Prime Minister Xavier Bettel, lost its majority in parliament during these elections. However, Xavier Bettel, the outgoing Prime Minister, will remain a key figure in the new government, having been appointed as the Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister. This indicates a degree of continuity despite the change in leadership and the overall political composition of the government.

This new coalition and leadership under Prime Minister Luc Frieden are set to guide Luxembourg for the next five years. The formation of this government marks a notable shift in the political landscape of Luxembourg, reflecting changes in public sentiment and political alliances within the country
